Sources of information

Our book collection contains more than seventy thousand books, scripts and research reports in the fields of economics, macro and microeconomics, finance, business, public economics, regional studies, management, marketing, statistics, sociology, psychology, informatics, computer technology, philosophy and other related disciplines.

Our collection of journals consists of around 100 Czech and foreign printed periodicals in the areas given above. The library also subscribes to more than ten Czech dailies and weeklies.

Electronic sources of information are available on 17 PCs in the library. These PCs are freely available for work with a text editor, table processor and other standard programs.

Useful foreign fulltext databases (e.g. EBSCO Discovery, EconLit, Euromonitor Passport, OECD iLibrary, ProQuest, JSTOR and many others), economic information, analyses and corporate information (Patria Plus, Firemní Monitor), citation indices (Web of Science, Scopus), media databases (Anopress IT), collections of electronic books (ebrary Academic Complete) and many others are also available.

How does it all work?

Readers can search for the literature they are looking for at the address aleph.muni.cz, where they can find out whether the library holds the requested documents and whether they are currently available or when documents that have been loaned out are to be returned. Documents that have been loaned out can be reserved in the web catalogue.

Two self-service copiers are available in the library and a self-service scanner is also freely available for use.

Excellent study conditions are provided by five study cubicles equipped with large LCD screens connected to a PC; these serve as quiet zones for individual study or – if reserved – for group work on projects, co-operative study activities, specialised seminars, etc.

The Bibliobox in the faculty foyer can be used to return books outside opening hours.

All sources of information are electronically secured against theft and the library is monitored by security cameras.

The library offers barrier-free access and is air-conditioned in the summer.

The rules for the operation of the CSI are laid out in the Library Code which you can find on the CSI web.

The staff of the CSI will be delighted to assist you if you need any help.
