Text 1:

Nowadays, numerous college students choose to get a part-time job to rich college life. There is no doubt that taking part-time job would bring plenty of benefits. Above all, part-time job can make our life more enjoyable and meaningful; that is to say, it can add more colour to the same day in and day out of the life. What's more, part-time job can make we college students get in touch with the society earlier. We would know what the real world is. And some college students live an extravagant life with a pocket money given by their parents, which keeps them from the hardship of earning money in the real world. More importantly, part-time job can help students gain some useful experience to approach the society and establish some connections in advance. Besides, because not every family is wealthy, getting a part-time job can lighten their burden.

As every coin has two sides, there are still some disadvantages in taking a part-time job. On the one hand, it occupies some of the students' spare time and the time in studying would decrease, maybe it would keep our attention from focusing on learning.

Therefore, our study would be affected in a certain extent. In a word, there are always two sides about all the things, what we need to do is to keep the balance of both sides. Undoubtedly, for college students, part-time job can not only improve the social connection, but also get plenty of precious experience. Therefore I think college students should take part-time jobs.

Text 2:

[...] These are excellent suggestions; I would really like to see them in action right away. But if pupils will work more in school, so will teachers. And their burden is already heavy as it is. To make this suggestion work, schools must employ more teachers so there will be a tutor for every pupil who needs one. One of the reasons why pupils do not learn as much as needed is the fact that there is not enough teachers. And schools do not employ more teachers because they cannot afford it. So the question is how this could be done economically [...]
