CEFC China Energy

- CEFC China Energy is a conglomerate company, whilst most revenue comes from oil and gas (60%), the company also operates in other areas, including financial investment and infrastructure.
- A CEFC statement said they are China's largest private oil and gas company, with 50,000 employees and revenue of more than $40 billion. However, internationally they are listed as a financial corporation.
- They are China's 6th largest financial group.
- The company has grown extremely fast after only being created in 2002
- China's increasing influence in developmental finance is backed by state owned banks. Since 2010, China Development Bank and the Export-Import Bank of China lent more money Annually to developing countries than the World Bank did.
- Between 2004 & 2013, Chinese overseas investment grew 14 times, from $45 billion to $613 billion.

Chinese ties to the Czech Republic

Xi Jinping And Milos Zeman

Ye Jianming and Milos Zeman

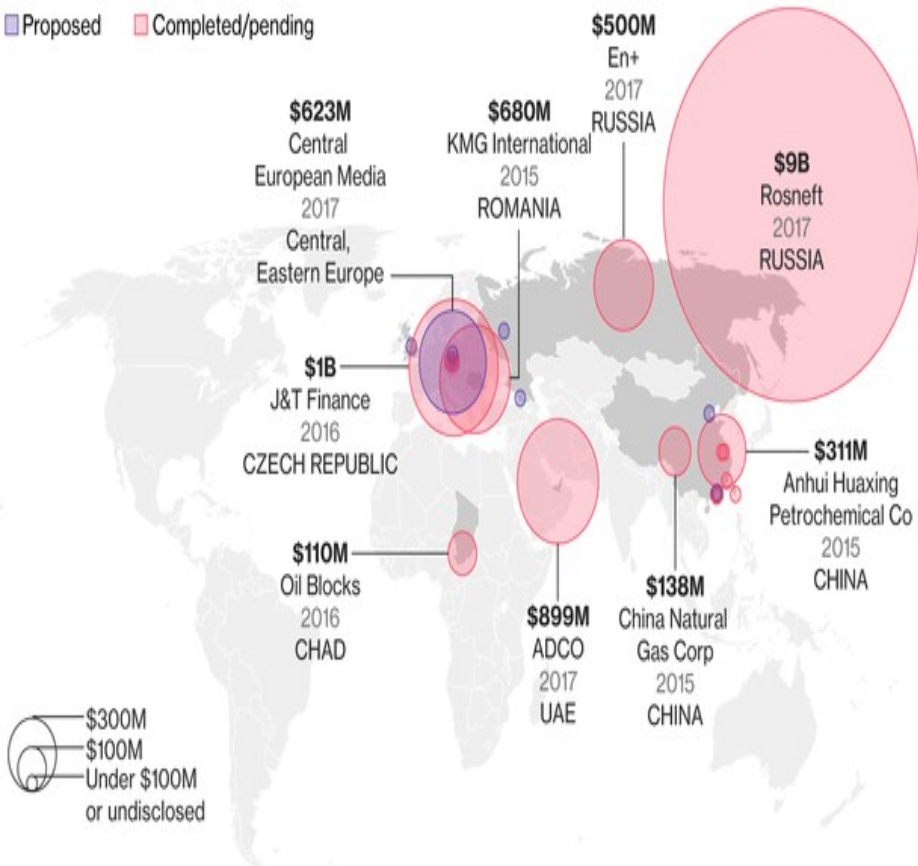

- China and the Czech republic have a strong relation. “One hundred years of humiliation” a term which is used to describe China’s past, has been used to sum up 20th century Czech republic, between German and Russian influence, joining and being regulated by the EU and the 2008 financial crisis which hurt Czech before it had even economic set off.
- Czech and Chinese political relations are strong. President Zeman explained the ideological grounds which connects the South-South community of the “weak and oppressed”.
- Zeman said that there was previous bad relations with the former Czech government and China because the government was “very submissive to the pressures from the US and the EU” however, Czech is “again an independent country” which creates foreign policy “based on its own national interest”.
- The anniversary of the velvet revolution in 2014 turned into an appeal for Zeman to resign. Protestors saw him as being too sympathetic to authoritarian regimes and Russia and China

Economic Diplomacy With Chinese Characteristics

01

CEFC stated its support for Beijing's strategic interest in the Czech Republic, and aimed to foster good relations with Czech political elite and society.

02

2013: President Miloš Zeman led the effort to entirely reorient Czech policy, dedicating a more forthcoming Czech attitude towards China.

03

2015: After CEFC's "shopping spree" in Prague, the Czech government announced the appointment of chairman Ye Jianming as honorary advisor to President Zeman on economic and Chinese matters. CEFC then established its European headquarters in Prague and began to hire retired Czech politicians.

China's Growing Political Influence

- Close relationship between Chairman Ye Jianming and President Miloš Zeman
- Zeman's ideological concessions
- Business involved a close-knit group of political entrepreneurs around the Czech President and his advisors.
- Prime Minister Andrej Babiš takes a more cautious approach, draws attention to lack of transparency in Chinese investments, and the minimal economic results.

Is CEFC as powerful as it seems?

- CEFC and Ye, CEFC's chairman and founder have come under scrutiny in the past year. So much so, there has been arrests, broken deals, debt and takeovers.
- Shanghai's Guosheng Group, an investment organisation owned by Shanghai's municipal government took temporary control over CEFC.
 - Later, the CITIC group acquired 49% of CEFC Shanghai, a subsidiary of CEFC, which owns CEFC Europe. CITIC is a state owned investment trust.
 - CITIC said that they will pay the CEFC debts, equating to 450 million Euros, to financing group J&T. However, they did not do this in the given time frame and J&T announced it had taken over the shareholder rights and ran crisis management in CEFC Europe.
- Founder Ye was struggling to pay debts and had mystery ties to the Chinese Liberation Army. he has now stepped down as chairman but is under investigation under the Chinese government.
- The Chinese government are heavily investigating private companies and are trying to do a "crack-down" on corporate corruption. This could be because media outlets are saying the people of China are losing out because they are being "exploited by western countries via international cooperation"
- Two men were recently arrested for trying to bribe the president of Chad a Ugandan official for oil drilling contracts. The name of the company was not announced, but it is highly speculated to be CEFC and the description matched CEFC. The two men were also close to the company and had relations with Ye.
 - CEFC China Energy had a debt ratio of 77% at the end of 2016, and has said to be growing.
