Process: Placing new animal
 Michael Koudela, 485441
 Process starts when a new animal is delivered to our Zoo. The manager first inserts its details into the system and chooses a suitable habitat for the animal from the listed habitats with free capacity. Then, the animal is picked up by a caretaker and according to its origin, it is either delivered directly to its habitat or to the quaranteen. The veterinary comes to the quaranteen, checks the animal's health and inserts the appointment results.
 - If it is healthy, it can be moved directly to the habitat.
 - If not, the vet can decide the animal can be healed within some time. They start with healing the animal (which can be then placed to its habitat).
 - If the animal is not healed within the specified time or it is marked as unhealable at the beginning, the manager will decide about its future. Such an animal can be either placed to its habitat anyway. Alternatively, it will be returned to the retailer, so the manager starts with the return animal process negotiation. On its end, the animal is removed from the zoo.
