Loss of motivation

Praise your employees

- Money and benefits are often not a long-term motivation.

Respect and support employees

- Listen to employees and let them share their opinions and ideas.
- Ask how they are doing and if you can help them with anything.

Promote sincerity and be transparent

- One of the effective ways to motivate employees is freedom.
- Try to prove that you are interested in opinions and complaints.
- Be transparent, and don't be afraid to tell employees about investments, internal structure, and other internal matters.

Let your team plan their work

- People love freedom.
- We are directly looking for the opportunity to control our time and energy.
- Give your employees the basic rules and goals you want to achieve.
- Make a plan, but leave specific steps cleanly to the team and individual employees.

Allow them to learn and grow personally.

- Give people the opportunity to choose courses, workshops or meetings with people in the field.

Thank you for your attention.
