Task 1 Complete the gaps with suitable prepositions:

Helping Teens Eat More Nutritious Foods

Teenagers face a variety of challenges. They pursue their independence, experience identity crisis, seek peer acceptance and worry _____ physical appearance. These factors affect food choice. Advertisers take advantage of this _____ pushing a vast array of products - candy, gum, soft drinks and snacks – at the teenage market. Potato chips and French fries make _____ more than one-third of the vegetable servings consumed _____ teens.

Additionally, many schools offer French fries _____ a regular basis, and soft drinks machines can be found in school hallways in cafeterias, competing _____ the school lunch. The increased consumption of fast foods, sugary beverages and snack foods crowds _____ nutrient-dense foods, thus limiting intake of calcium, iron, zinc, fat-soluble vitamins, etc.

Teens often don't think _____ the long-term benefits of good health. They have a hard time relating today's actions _____ tomorrow's health outcomes. Many teenagers tend _____ think they can change habits later, there's no hurry.

Still, healthful teen food habits do not require giving _____ favourite foods. Small portions of fatty foods can complement larger portions of lean meats, vegetable proteins, fruits, and whole-grain products.
