

DISTRICT
EDITION
FRIDAY
JULY 8, 2005

The Examiner.

WASHINGTON

www.dcxaminer.com

Hospital planned for terror response

Designed to help victims of a biological or nuclear strike, the ER One medical facility in the District is slated to be up and running between 2009 and 2010.
Story by JOSH EISERIKE, Page 20

D.C. area braces for Cindy's bite

Flash-flood warnings are in effect through Friday afternoon as remnants of the tropical storm head toward the metro region.
Story by DAVID HALE, Page 22

Jay Westcott/Examiner

Ushering in a lifelong dream

Retired Virginia high school baseball coach Ron Simms has newfound happiness as an usher for the Washington Nationals.
Story by JOHN KEIM, Page 54

Edmond Terakopian/AP

Above: Walking wounded leave a London subway stop after explosions ripped through the British capital's transit system during the Thursday morning rush hour. Below: Metro Transit Police officer Steve Morrison patrols the L'Enfant Plaza station after word reached the U.S. that terrorists had attacked London.

LONDON HORROR

Greg Whitesell/Examiner

World girds to prevent future attacks

Terrorist attacks on double-decker bus, subway kill at least 37, injure hundreds

>> SEE WORLD, Page 14

Heavily armed police scour Metro stations, though many riders appear indifferent

>> STORY BY MIKE RUPERT, Page 4

A group of 10 U.Md. students visiting the British city are safe, according to officials

>> STORY BY PATRICK RUCKER, Page 6