

Ideological Paradox

Bureaucracy and Political Parties

U.S. and Israeli governments

- From 1981 to 1984 Likud (Begin)
- From 1984 to 1988 unity government of Alignment and Likud (Peres and Shamir)
- From 1988-1992 Likud (Shamir)
 - The Twelfth Knesset saw the rise of the ultra-orthodox religious parties as a significant force in Israeli politics, and as a crucial "swing" element which could determine which of the large 2 secular parties (Likud, Alignment) would get to form the coalition government.

Secular right-wing

- The Likud was formed as a secular party as an alliance of several right-wing parties prior to the 1973 elections: Herut, Liberal Party, Free Centre, National List, Movement for Greater Israel. (5)
- Herut had been the largest right-wing party.
- It had been in coalition with the Liberals since 1965 (Gahal) with Herut as the senior partner.
- Herut remained the senior partner in the new grouping, named Likud, or "Consolidation", since it was the consolidation of the Israeli right.

Ideology

- Likud emphasizes national security policy based on a strong military force when threatened with continued enmity against Israel.
- It has shown reluctance to negotiate with its neighbors whom it believes continue to seek the destruction of the Jewish state. Link
- As of 2014, the party remains divided between moderates and hard-liners

Ideology

- Historically, Likud advocated free enterprise and nationalism, but it has compromised these ideals in practice, as its constituency has changed.
- Its support for populist economic programs are at odds with its free enterprise tradition but are meant to serve its largely nationalistic, lower-income voters in small towns and urban neighborhoods.
- While the party has played into the traditional sympathies of its voter base, the origins and ideology of Likud are very secular.
- Religious parties have come to view it as a more comfortable coalition partner than Labor.

Policies

- The Likud party platform since mid-1990s claims to support free market capitalist and liberal agenda. Practically speaking it is a mixed economic policy.
- VAT, income and corporate taxes reduced.
- Free trade with the EU and USA, dismantled 'monopoly' operating in Israel.
- Additionally, privatized several government-owned companies, e.g., El Al and Bank Leumi and has tried to privatize land in Israel, (symbolically owned by the state in the name of the Jewish people).

Labor-Alignment

- Labor party
- From 1977-1991 Alignment between centre-left parties
- Labor's original socialist ideology evolved into a program that supports both a market economy and social welfare programs.
- Since 1992 the party's foreign policy retains a strong orientation toward the US with its security policy maintaining a permanent peace with the Palestinians only based on agreements that are enforceable.
 - “land for peace”

Reagan Revolution

- 1981-1989 Ronald Reagan (Republican) U.S. president.
- Conservative ideology
 - political
 - economic

Paradox?

- Conservative vs. secular conservative?
 - religious conservatives in Israel have own parties
 - tension between U.S. secular conservatives and market conservatives
- Peace Process
 - Schultz Plan (1988)
- Economy (1987-88)

Restriction

- Departments
 - personality (Baker)
 - inter-office/departmental rivalry
 - famous Weinberger vs. Schultz
- Interest Groups
 - AIPAC vs. J-street
 - AAI (Arab-American Institute)

Paradox

- AWAC sale
- Iraq nuclear reactor (pre-emptive doctrine)
- 1982 Lebanon invasion
 - Israel as aggressor
- Foreign Military Aid
- Sudan-Soviet refugees
 - “global” Jewry
- Settlements (rainbow over an ancient land)

MOU's

Mixed & Missed Signals

- 1988 (Alignment to Likud)
 - settlements
- 1991 Gulf War
- 1996 (Labor to Likud)
 - Oslo II
- 1999-2001 (Labor to Likud)
 - Camp David with Clinton, Barak and Arafat

Misunderstood?

- “F_K, the jews, they don’t vote for us anyway”
 - James Baker III, Secretary of State
- “Punishing us, like a child”
 - M. Begin
- After 1979 and especially after 1994 different approaches: legal vs. diplomatic

Internal-External Variables

- Coalition and Unity Israeli governments
 - religious parties in Israel as “kingmakers”
 - smaller parties and personalities
- Divided government in the U.S.
 - Democratic president and Republican Congress or vice versa.
- Israeli-Palestinian peace process
 - extremists and militant extremists hinder progress

Promise Denied

- 1991 Madrid
- 1993 Oslo Peace Accords
- 1997 Hebron
 - West Bank withdrawal of Israeli troops
- 2000 Camp David
