How to choose right sources?

How to choose right sources?

- Goal is to choose authoritative and reliable sources
 - Focus on publications in well-known journals and publishing houses first
 - Rough guide of paper relevance (beware, not all the time!) is the number of citations
 - Critically evaluate quality of the examined papers
 - Use articles and books as sources of sources
 - Check sources used within articles
 - Check papers which cite the original article
 - Use more recent papers first – use old papers only when these are seminal works (e.g. very important)
 - Triangulate your sources (for each information, check more than one source)
 - Mind authors' background and affiliation

How to choose right sources?

- If there's enough academic sources on the topic, avoid
 - Reports and position papers from various institutions and organizations
 - Newspaper articles
- In almost all cases, avoid
 - Wikipedia (serves at most as a springboard to sources)
 - Websites with no authors and/or dubious sources
 - Blogs, vlogs, social networks (unless you use their content as data)
 - Heavily biased sources (unless you need to point out a normative position/stance)

Securitization theory and securitization studies

R Taureck - Journal of International relations and Development, 2006 - Springer
 Opposed to the recently fashionable 'moral and ethical'criticism levelled against Ole Wæver's securitization theory this article argues that such criticism fundamentally misconceives the analytical goal of securitization theory, which is namely to offer a tool for ...

Can securitization theory be used in normative analysis? Towards a just securitization theory

R Floyd - Security Dialogue, 2011 - journals.sagepub.com
 While securitization studies have paid considerable attention to the moral value of desecuritization, they have paid almost no attention to the morality of securitization. In this article, I attempt to rectify that situation by proposing a revision of securitization theory that ...

The Copenhagen School on tour in Kyrgyzstan: Is securitization theory useable outside Europe?

C Wilkinson - Security dialogue, 2007 - journals.sagepub.com
 The article argues that the theoretical framework presented by the Copenhagen School is currently unsuited to empirical studies outside the West owing to two factors. First, the presence of the 'Westphalian straitjacket'has prevented explicit interrogation of the ...

deficient core knowledge, I propose that we turn an ostensible weakness into a strength. We should identify our mission as bringing together insights and theories that would otherwise remain scattered in other disciplines. Because of the lack of interchange among the disciplines, hypotheses thoroughly discredited in one field may receive wide acceptance in another. Potential research paradigms remain fractured, with pieces here and there but no comprehensive statement to guide research. By bringing ideas together in one location, communication can aspire to become a master discipline that synthesizes related theories and concepts and exposes them to the most rigorous, comprehensive statement and exploration. Reaching this goal would require a
