There was trouble yesterday in the village of Little Hurling Business Centre just outside the village. Local people, upset that no one had spoken to them before about sending refugees there, 1 _____ a protest meeting in the village hall. "We are a tolerant group of people in Little Hurling," said Major Ronald Smythe, who has lived in the village for 25 years. "We are happy that the government has 2 _____ assistance to these people and provided accommodation for them. But Little Hurling is not the place where they should be. It would be better if they were in a larger town or city."

Basil Lloga, a spokesperson for the refugees, said: "I am sure the villagers are not discriminating against these people. Most of them have come here as genuine asylum seekers. They are afraid that if they return home, they will be killed or 3 _____. After the terrible time they have had in their own country, they need some peace and quiet to help them recover."

"Unfortunately, there was not time to talk to the villagers", said Kim Thompson of the government's Refugee Action Group. "We only 4 _____ the refugees were arriving this morning and there was nowhere else for them to go at this moment. We very much hope the villagers will welcome them. In the recent past there have been villages which 5 _____ refugees into their communities without any major problems".
