

Questioning the 12th Century: Historiography, Visual Cultures, and Global Middle Ages

DU1713c Seminář: od Konstantina po Giotto
Spring Semester

During the 12th century a cultural and economic revival took place; many historians trace the origins of the Renaissance to this time. The balance of economic power slowly began to shift from the region of the eastern Mediterranean to western Europe. The Gothic style developed in art and architecture.

Middle Ages | Definition, Dates, Characteristics, & Facts

[The 12th century in Europe] was in many respects an age of fresh and vigorous life. The epoch of the Crusades, of the rise of towns, and of the earliest bureaucratic states of the West, it saw the culmination of Romanesque art and the beginnings of Gothic; the emergence of the vernacular literatures; the revival of the Latin classics and of Latin poetry and Roman law; the recovery of Greek science, with its Arabic additions, and of much of Greek philosophy; and the origin of the first European universities. The 12th century left its signature on higher education, on the scholastic philosophy, on European systems of law, on architecture and sculpture, on the liturgical drama, on Latin and vernacular poetry.

RENAISSANCE AND RENASCENCES

By ERWIN PANOFSKY

FOR many centuries the history of Europe has been divided into three periods: Antiquity, the Middle Ages, and the Modern Era, the latter ushered in by the Italian Renaissance. This scheme determines the curricula of our colleges and universities; it underlies the organization of our museums and Learned Societies; it plays a part in our everyday speech and thought. No matter where the main incisions are made (as a rule Antiquity ends approximately with the 5th Century A. D. while the Modern Era begins somewhere around 1400 in Italy and somewhere around 1500 in the countries north of the Alps): we generally conceive of history in terms of those three periods and thereby accept the Italian Renaissance as a, quite literally, epoch-making event.

This system of periodization was, characteristically, evolved by the Renaissance itself, and it was summed up, about the middle of the 19th Century, by two great scholars, Jules Michelet of Paris and Jacob Burckhardt of Basle. However, their all-too-impressive characterization of the Renaissance as "the discovery of the world and of man" — apparently implying that the Middle Ages had not been aware of either — was bound to arouse opposition. Generations of scholars set out to prove what Michelet and Burckhardt had never seriously questioned: that the Italian Renaissance, howsoever defined, did not emerge like Athene from the head of Zeus. It was shown that innumerable tendencies, ideas, inventions and discoveries credited to the Modern Era had announced themselves in the Middle Ages; that, conversely, the

“I have applied the term ‘Romanesque’ to the oldest monuments, where the sculptural ornamentation is not perceptible, and which are distinguished by the simplicity of their plans and the heaviness of their ornaments. By ‘Romano-Byzantine’ style, I mean buildings where the architecture of Byzantium penetrated with force and blended with the style that had originated in the wake of the Roman domination. Finally, I qualify as ‘Byzantine’ the buildings where the rules of Greek architecture predominate, and hide, under the multiplicity of ornaments and sculpture, the simplicity of the Roman conceptions.”

The idea of “style 1200”

THE YEAR 1200

THE EXHIBITION

“This exhibition is the first to concentrate on the art of the late twelfth and early thirteenth century. In the earlier development of medieval art one would hardly find another phase of such short duration that could boast of a similarly concentrated, many-sided, and international character of its artistic production. [...] According to conventional periodization, the arts around 1200 had to be called both ‘early Gothic’ and ‘late Romanesque’. However [...] the labels Romanesque and Gothic are not sufficiently precise to encompass the concrete art-historical situation prevailing toward the end of the twelfth and the beginning of the thirteenth century”

Seminar essays

- ca. 4 pages (7200 signs) + bibliography at the end
- Pick one twelfth-century object/monument and, after consultation with me (in person or email) read the most recent bibliography
- Recontextualize the object and its bibliography within the question of the 12th-century. Is it part of global Middle Ages? Is it going against the idea of the 12th-century as a moment of transformation or is it fully part of this discourse? Are there historiographical problems linked with this object? Etc.
- Do not hesitate to write me if you have questions or doubts

- Possible subjects include:
 - Palermo: “exporting” Norman Romanesque in the 12th century?
 - Cloister of Monreale: a meeting of workshops and traditions
 - Rotunda of St. Catherine in Znojmo: cult of the Premyslids or cultural crossroads
 - The liturgical space and images of the church of San Clemente in Rome and the Gregorian Reformation
 - Late Antique Revival, St. Trophime in Arles or Saint-Gilles-du-Gard

Navicule ac de caracis...:
A Brief History of Medieval Votive Ships

The presentation explores the material and visual evidence for medieval ex-voto ship models, gifted to shrines after surviving shipwreck or prevailing in a naval battle. Focusing on the half millennium between c. 1000 and c. 1500, we will explore the materiality of these objects, their contexts of (re-)use, what is known about their patrons and artists, and the relationship between ship models and their large-scale counterparts – most notably the cog and the carrack – deployed in medieval Europe's expanding theatres of commerce, warfare, and exploration.
