

Tula'i

- Excavated by Hole in 1973
- Comparable in age with Mohammad Jaffar Phase in Deh Luran, I.e., early pottery Neolithic
- Site is a camping area of pastoral nomadic people
- Layout of tent sites same as today's

TEPE TŪLĀ'Ī: AN EARLY CAMPSITE IN KHUZISTAN, IRAN.

Frank HOLE

ABSTRACT

A sondage, made in the spring of 1973 to determine the characteristics of an early prehistoric site near Andimeshk, Khuzistan, Iran, revealed an extensive campground of pastoralists. The campsites and associated middens are Sefid Phase in the Deh Luran chronology. The site Tūlā'ī was occupied for perhaps 200 years during the range 6200-5900 B.C.

RÉSUMÉ

Un sondage, effectué au printemps de 1973 en Iran sur un site préhistorique du Khuzistan près d'Andimeshk, a permis de reconnaître un vaste campement de pasteurs. Les vestiges de campement appartiennent à la phase "Sefid" selon la chronologie établie au Deh Luran. Le site, TŪLĀ'Ī, a été occupé pendant, peut-être, 200 ans, entre 6200 et 5900 av. J.C.

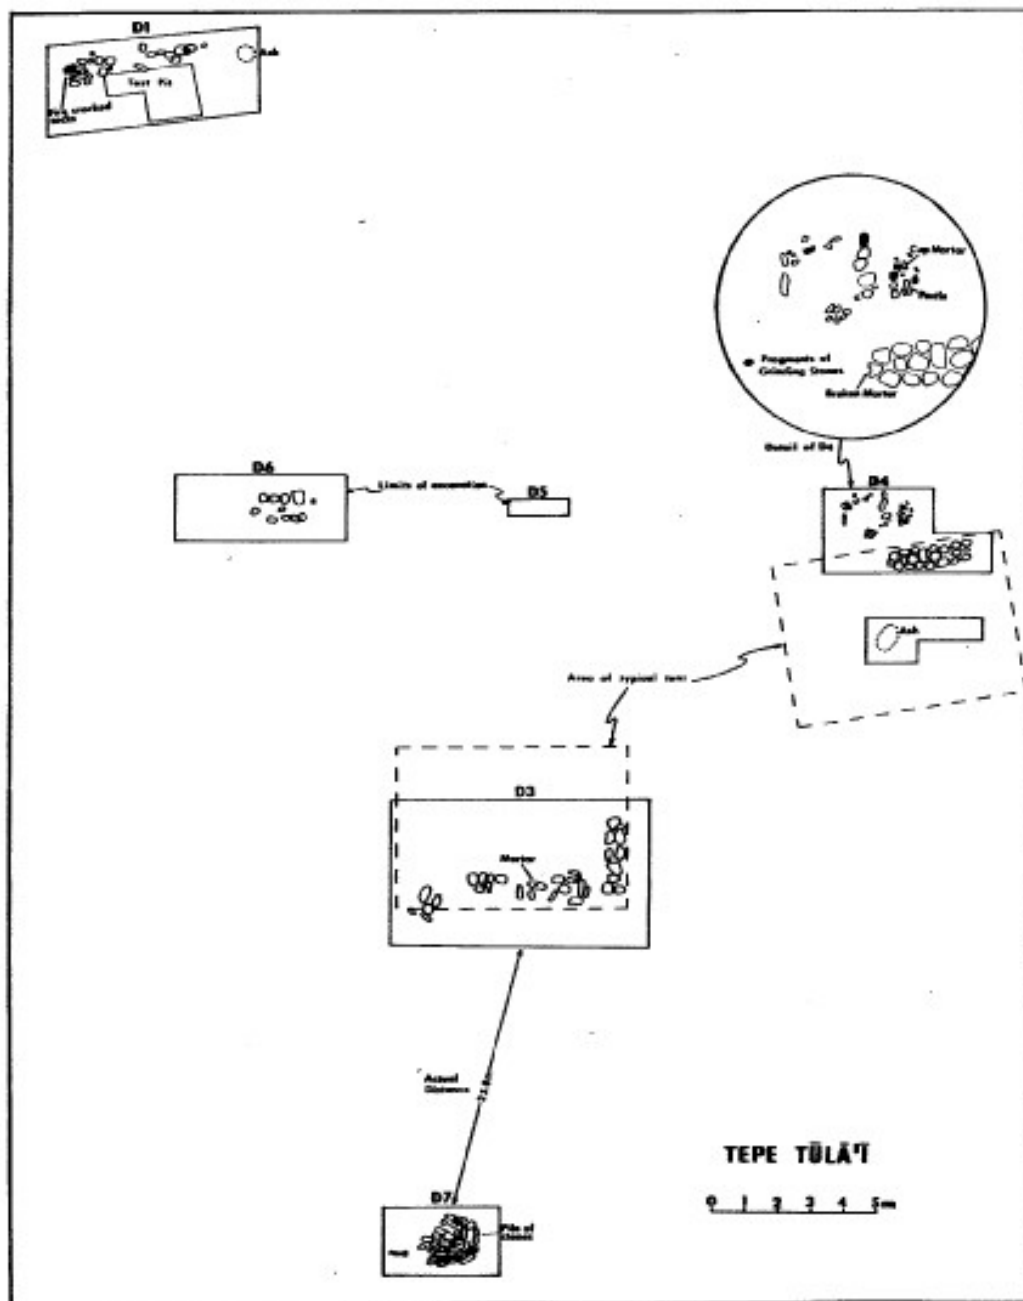

Fig. 7 - Tent sites in Area D showing alignments of stones. Circled area is detail of trash scattered behind tent D4. Outlines of typical tents used by nomads today are superimposed with dashed lines.

