

WRITER PROFILE

I usually write short stories with a bit of fantasy or horror theme. Recently I've started working on a fantasy novel. Aside from that I also enjoy writing about travelling.

To be honest I'm still working on developing a habit of writing. The time I spend writing is extremely uneven for example I'm able to write a whole day and after that not even touch it for a whole week.

When I'm satisfied with something then it must be really good. I'm, maybe overly, concerned about the quality of my work and I can be very demanding. So, no I wouldn't say that I'm proud of what I produce very often.

Well, that depends. there are days that I'm super creative and all but there are also days when my level of creativity is below zero and I just can't produce a simple sentence.

When it comes to sharing my work I don't mind as far as I know that it's not complete trash.

I think we could consider creative writing academic writing. (But before the last lesson we had I wouldn't be so sure about it.)

I would say that I read quite often, could say on a daily bases. Usually, I read fantasy such as Harry Potter but from time to time I'm in the mood for some good detective story or good old classic like for example my favourite - Picture of Dorian Gray.

What I use mostly is not-so-complicated English, therefore I would say that my language skills are pretty basic.

And finally, what is an essay in my own words? Well, essay = our own written text in which we put our very own thoughts that can or can not be based on facts and it only depends on what the essay should be about.

Let's start with a script, to be more exact a play script. I've always been interested in theatre and the way actors interpret the story in a certain way. So I think it would be kind of interesting to see how my work would be interpreted by someone else.

Let's proceed to next genre a satire. There is not much to say just that I enjoy a good text ridiculing the flaws of modern society with a bit of sass into it.

Short stories are another of my favorite things to write because they doesn't necessarily involve that many plots that need to line up at the end as the novels do, meaning that the author is less likely to require fixing plot holes.

Another of my picks are alternate endings. This fan-fiction based genre, I believe, might be either really good or extraordinarily bad. It of course depends on the reader and their relationship with the original story and it's ending. But what I like about reading those is that the authors technically creates another alternative dimension for the story and gives it a new meaning.

And finally my free time consuming but beloved novels. So this is something that I love both reading and writing. Just that it allows you to create a completely new world is simply amazing. It's something that's only limited by the fantasy of the author and that's why I like it so much.

Explicatory essay - The purpose of this essay is to explain and interpret for example a novel, a poem, a short story, etc.. What is usually being examined are sentences, verses or passage extracted from literary work. It simply discuss the whole structure of literary pieces.

Narrative essay tells the story of author or protagonist. They talk about their experience and how it influenced them in their lives.

Causes and Effects essay - It is a composition written to find out the initial causes and with further research the effects they had. This kind of essay is usually used for scientific topics.

Now to comparison:

What I could compare are short stories and narrative essays because that in the case of non-fiction stories can be used for the same purpose. So we could say that this style falls into the mentioned genre.

However, that's the only style I could put together with my previously picked genres. Maybe because in my writing I focus more on the creative texts and the scientific I use only for my school assignments.
