Queerness and its Relation to Camp Aesthetics

For Susan Sontag, in her 1966 essay 'Notes on "Camp"':

- camp is a sensibility that is 'almost ineffable' but that is linked to 'things-being-what-they-are-not' and that thrives on artifice and exaggeration.

Some like it Hot (Billy Wilder, 1959)

‘To emphasize style is to slight content, or to introduce an attitude which is neutral with respect to content. It goes without saying that the camp sensibility is disengaged, depoliticized – or at least apolitical.’ (p.277)

And yet....

marginality may be a prerequisite – Cocteau not Gide* (p. 278); ‘[c]amp taste turns its back on the good-bad axis of ordinary aesthetic judgement’, rejecting ‘the pantheon of high culture’ (p.286) [cf. postmodernism as a whole].

‘[E]very sensibility is self-serving to the group that promotes it [... and] Camp taste [...] definitely has something propagandistic about it’ (p.290).

*Writer Gide much more defensive about his gayness than Cocteau, especially in his youth - as well as more ‘establishment’ in artistic style and positioning (e.g. won Nobel Prize)

'Camp and the Gay Sensibility' – Jack Babuscio (1980)

The explicitly stated aim of this piece:

'I define the gay sensibility as a creative energy reflecting a consciousness that is different from the mainstream; a heightened awareness of certain human complications of feeling that spring from the fact of social oppression; in short, a perception of the world which is coloured, shaped, directed and defined by the fact of one's gayness'

Reproduced in Babuscio, Camp (Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 1999).

The Emergence of Queer (Studies)

- In the 1990s, lesbians and gay men identify their oppositional reading strategies of media and literary texts as 'queer'.
- Away from the notions of oppression and liberation of earlier gay and lesbian criticism, 'queer readings are fully inflected with irony, transgressive gender parody and deconstructed subjectivities.'

The Oxford Guide to Film Studies (1998), p.142.

Leading to an expansion of queerness to take in but also transcend the category of sexual identity, including in cinema – in tandem with social changes, including in France.

Sight and Sound Poll 2022

In 1952, the Sight and Sound team had the novel idea of asking critics to name the greatest films of all time. The tradition became decennial, increasing in size and prestige as the decades passed.

The Sight and Sound poll is now a major bellwether of critical opinion on cinema and this year's edition (its eighth) is the largest ever, with 1,639 participating critics, programmers, curators, archivists and academics each submitting their top ten ballot. What has risen up the ranks? What has fallen? Has 2012's winner Vertigo held on to its title? Find out below.

Heritage Cinema: Filming the Past

- Selling an image of the national past at a time when national identities are in question (1980s)
- Depicts middle- and upper-class experience for a middle-class, older audience
- Character, place, atmosphere and milieu favoured over dramatic, goal-directed action

Molière (2007)

Note difference from 'post-heritage' cycle since mid-1990s, characterised by more sex and violence, a faster pace and a 'showier', often faster-paced aesthetic.

Heritage Critique

‘the past is displayed as visually spectacular pastiche, inviting a nostalgic gaze that resists the ironies and social critiques so often suggested narratively by these films’ (Higson 1993: 109)

‘Even those films that develop an ironic narrative of the past end up celebrating and legitimating the spectacle of one class and one cultural tradition and identity at the expense of others through the discourse of authenticity, and the obsession with the visual splendors of period detail’ (Higson 1993: 119)

'Haptic' Style?

Haptic cinema 'encourages a bodily relationship between the viewer and the image' (Laura U. Marks 2000, p. 164)

For Karl Schoonover and Rosalind Galt, cinematic hapticity 'is itself queer', for 'it constitutes a disruption of dominant modes of heteronormative vision and provokes a relationship between spectator and screen that opens up the viewer to unexpected and transgressive intimacies' (2016: 237).

Spaces of Magic and Possibility

Architectural improbability

From autobiography to autofiction

One began to be tired of 'I'. Not but what [sic] this 'I' was a most respectable 'I'; honest and logical; as hard as a nut, and polished for centuries by good teaching and good feeding. I respect and admire that 'I' from the bottom of my heart. But [...] in the shadow of the letter 'I' all is shapeless as mist.
