Which Of These Viral Stories Were Hoaxes?

Did that reaaaally happen, though?

8 viral images that fooled the Internet

BY CRAIG CHARLES ON JANUARY 28, 2015

We crawl back through the archives and take a look at 7 famous photos that fooled the Internet and turned out to be nothing more than the result of digital manipulation...

6. The Accidental Tourist

Also known as the 9/11 Tourst guy photo, this photo spread across the Internet like wildfire shortly after the 9/11 attacks and the messages that caption this photo claim the image was found on a digital camera within the ruins of the World Trade Center buildings.

You can see a man atop of the viewing platform on one of the buildings, and right below him is – according to the messages – one of the planes that hit the WTC, thus leading the viewer to assume the photo was taken only a second or so before the 9/11 attacks on the WTC – and America – started.

Despite the image going viral, the many inconsistencies – including the wrong airplane, wrong airline and wrong direction – meant that image didn't hold up for long before being dismissed as a forgery. This was later confirmed by the man in the photo himself, Peter Guzil, who eventually released the original, unedited photo, that of course did not include the plane. See below.
