A microscopic image showing a filament of the green alga Trentepohlia sp. The filament is composed of several cells, each containing numerous small, reddish-brown granules. At the tip of the filament, there is a larger, rounded structure labeled as a sporangium, which is filled with a dense mass of greenish-yellow material. An arrow points from the text 'sporangium' to this structure. The background is a light blue-grey color, and other parts of the filament are visible in the lower-left corner.
