

SpatialityB

Cloke, P., Crang, P. and Goodwin, M., eds. 2014: Introducing human geographies. 3rd ed. London and New York: Routledge.

Cloke P. et al., 2014, 940, define spatiality: the spatial arrangements of relations, both between people and non-human things. The term emphasizes the production of space, i.e. how places are socially and materially created, reconfigured and experienced in the context of the changing economic, political and cultural relations between other places, people and things. A consideration of spatiality also includes the effects spaces have on these relations and the power relations associated with this